the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. This increase is due to the fact that the number of people who are under 15 years of age has increased in every country in the world, except for a few countries in Europe and North America.

The increase in the number of people who are under 15 years of age has led to a number of problems. One of the most serious problems is the increase in the number of children who are working. In many countries, children are working in dangerous and unhealthy conditions. This is often due to the fact that their parents are poor and need the money that their children can earn.

Another problem is the increase in the number of children who are out of school. In many countries, children are not going to school because their parents are poor and cannot afford to send them to school. This is often due to the fact that the cost of school is too high for many families.

The increase in the number of people who are under 15 years of age has also led to a number of other problems. For example, there is an increase in the number of children who are living in poverty. This is often due to the fact that their parents are poor and cannot afford to provide for them.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has also become an important employer of women, with 5.5 million women employed in the public sector in 1995, compared with 4.5 million in 1980.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of women. One reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its workforce. In 1995, 80% of the public sector workforce were women, compared with 60% in 1980.

Another reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its senior management. In 1995, 30% of the public sector senior management were women, compared with 20% in 1980.

A third reason is that the public sector has a high proportion of women in its part-time workforce. In 1995, 40% of the public sector workforce were part-time, compared with 30% in 1980.
