the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 2000). The prevalence of mental health problems has increased in the general population, and the incidence of mental health problems has increased in the prison population.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the mental health needs of prisoners. The Department of Health (2000) has published a strategy for mental health services, which includes a commitment to improve the mental health of prisoners. The Department of Health (2000) has also published a strategy for mental health services, which includes a commitment to improve the mental health of prisoners.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the health care needs of the elderly population. The Department of Health (1999) has identified the need to develop a new approach to the care of the elderly, which is based on the principles of 'active ageing'. This approach is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently, and to participate in the activities of their community. It is based on the idea that older people should be able to live in their own homes, and to receive the care and support that they need to do so.

The Department of Health (1999) has identified a number of key areas for action in order to achieve this goal. These include: (1) the need to improve the quality of care and support for older people; (2) the need to ensure that older people have access to the services that they need; (3) the need to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes; and (4) the need to ensure that older people are able to participate in the activities of their community.

The Department of Health (1999) has also identified a number of key areas for action in order to improve the quality of care and support for older people. These include: (1) the need to improve the training and skills of care workers; (2) the need to improve the quality of care and support for older people; (3) the need to ensure that older people have access to the services that they need; and (4) the need to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes.
